Language Stammtisch at Neue Nachbarschaft Moabit welcomes people who want to practice their german language skills in an informal group meeting format. Our evenings are held on a regular basis and are happening in a welcoming and friendly atmosphere often round table. We are enjoying a non-horizantal format of meetings and are always improving about the themes that we speak about. Our meetings are open to all ages regardless of level of experience. We practice non-hierarchical participatory model - no students and no teachers, we are all joining the conversation together.

Gentle community yoga, with its emphasis on breathing and quiet reflection, allows us to come away feeling flexible in our bodies, relaxed in our minds, and calmed in our nervous systems. Gentler practices often provide mental, physiological rewards. We are inviting all everyone, regardless of age or level of experience, to join our community yoga hour.

The event brings into view a transdisciplinary and transcultural perspective towards the notion of "intervention" by introducing Neue Nachbarschaft/Moabit - an ongoing socially-engaged project initiated by Marina Naprushkina in Berlin. With the focus on community work with people primarily from migrant and refugee backgrounds, the project underlines a transcultural aspect of "intervening," thus foregrounding the complexity of the geo-political processes and the current state of political affairs in the region. The event will review the practice at the intersection of art and social realms, including participatory art forms such as service, activism, education, and community work. It will cover a series of critical questions related to the structural aspects of collaboration, social and ethical ways of engagement, and the roles of various stakeholders in non-vertical and community driven practices.

The Collaborative Research Center "Intervening Arts" is exploring how artistic perspectives and positions impact societal processes, with a focus on the relationship between art, society, and politics. It revolves around the idea that the arts play a significant role in struggles surrounding global power structures, addressing crises like climate change and democratic recession, and paving the way for new modes of living and working.
